Market Overview

Ex-Japan Asian stock markets declined modestly in May 08 following a noteworthy April rise, pressured by concerns that rising energy and raw material costs will stoke inflation and throttle economic growth. The markets were also restrained by rekindled sub-prime crisis concerns as certain banks continued to book additional major losses. Only Singapore and Indonesia made gains. China led the region lower as the Bank of China continued to tighten monetary policy to counter rising inflation. The biggest stock in the China index, China Mobile, suffered after the government announced a restructuring of the telecom industry. Both Taiwan and Malaysia retreated on political concerns. Singapore moved higher on the strength of commodity-related and offshore oil rig stocks; whilst Indonesia was led by commodity-related, energy and paper stocks. US Treasuries bond yields rose significantly in May, particularly in short dated bonds, on speculation of a tighter monetary policy as inflation concerns intensified. Spreads narrowed as investors' increased appetite for risk increased, lower-rated credit outperformed.

The Fund lost 1.0% compared to the 1.2% decline in its benchmark. Asset allocation was neutral, but stock selection was positive, with the Asian equity sub-fund being the main contributor. During the month, the Fund maintained its preference for U.S. investment grade bonds, funded out of its underweight in Asian equities. U.S. investment grade bonds offer attractive spreads and seem to be pricing in excessively pessimistic economic conditions, so we remain overweight in this asset class.
